AS WEBER FOLLOWS FIELDS

When Lew Fields died last July many remarked that it was impossible to think of him without Joe Weber. The death of Joe now revives countless pleasant recollections in which both famous comedians are necessarily included.

For the elongated Lew and the diminutive Joe, during their more than fifty years of prosperous partnership, were the Siamese twins of the American stage. What would happen in France, Belgium and Holland, in Norway, Jugoslavia and Greece and Poland if the iron hand of the Nazis were withdrawn, if the invaders were less vigilant, if they diminished their strength in the occupied areas in the slightest degree? The answer to this question is given in the reports coming almost daily from these unhappy lands. The people would rise and exterminate the invaders.

STATEMENT BY Senator JAMES J. DAVIS

I have been asked what attitude I would assume toward the so-called Pew-Grundy group, and the so-called John L. Lewis group, if I am chosen Governor of Pennsylvania. I feel that it is a fair question that deserves a fair, straight-forward answer.

It has been repeatedly alleged that the Pew-Grundy group and the John L. Lewis group are striving for controlling power and influence in the State of Pennsylvania.

Regardless of whether these two groups might, on occasion, work together temporarily, ultimately and inevitable their interests would clash, and that clash could involve, perhaps very disastrously, the affairs of all the people of the State of Pennsylvania.

The Pew-Grundy group represents very powerful financial interests which could, under certain conditions, exercise a vast influence upon the economy of the State of Pennsylvania. On the other hand, the John L. Lewis group represents powerful labor interests which, under certain circumstances, could exercise a vast influence upon the economic affairs of the State of Pennsylvania. I have no arrangements or deals with either of them or any other factions. When nominated and elected, as Governor of Pennsylvania, I shall do my best to give fair play and a square deal to the interests represented by the so-called Pew-Grundy group and those associated with John L. Lewis. No group nor individual has a right to expect more; nor should any individual or group be satisfied with less.

Any such two groups, possessed of such tremendous potentialities for good or ill, combining and working together, could become a very dangerous power, if their motivating impulses were a lust for personal power and aggrandizement. The same fact would hold if the motivating impulses were for a control of the economic destinies of the State for purposes of profit, political or financial. Any clash between two such potentially powerful groups, if they were permitted to ramify their roots throughout the State of Pennsylvania, could very easily involve not only the financial and political welfare of the State, but the social structure of Pennsylvania as well.

I think it is important to the present and future welfare of the State of Pennsylvania that no group or faction be allowed to grow to such a place of power, political or financial, as would enable them to flaunt or thwart the will of the rank and file of the people. These groups and their leaders deserve every consideration due all earnest citizens of the State of Pennsylvania at the hands of any Governor.

If either or both of these factions or any other faction, should attempt to grow to such power as to dominate the political or economic or social destinies of the State of Pennsylvania in defiance of the will of the people, they should be prevented from so doing. When I am elected Governor of the State of Pennsylvania, if any such faction makes any such attempt to so dominate the affairs of the State, I shall spare no efforts to defeat such an

I am determined, when I am made Governor of Pennsylvania, to restore home rule to the State of Pennsylvania, and that means home rule by the rank and file people of Pennsylvania, and not by factions or cliques.

Finally, when I am chosen Governor of the State of Pennsylvania, I shall unhesitatingly oppose any interests or aims which conflict with the welfare of the best interests of the State of Pennsylvania. I shall work with these and all other groups in the State for the welfare of the State.

Sailplanes for U.S. Gliding Marines

U. S. Navy Guards a Big Atlantic Convoy

Looking down from above on this gun emplacement (top left) aboard a warship of a U.S. task force on convoy duty in the Atlantic, you might think the boys were having their afternoon nap. These men are so well trained that a single order would have that gun blazing in short order. Bottom, some of the ships in the convoy on the broad Atlantic. Photo was made from one of the warships. Right, a warship's searchlight blinks out a message to other ships of the Atlantic task force in a dense fog while escorting the convoy.
